

THE CINCINNATI MORNING HERALD, THURSDAY, APRIL 30, 1874.

With a view of producing greater uniformity and efficiency in the work of teaching, the "Manual of Instruction and Discipline" has been prepared for the use of teachers. The Commissioners are careful to state that the work is not intended "to diminish the free exercise of individual intelligence on the part of teachers, or to shackle them too severely with unbending rules and regulations in reference to the minutiae of their work." It may be easily believed, however, that without pro-

A striking feature in the American school-system is the very great preponderance of female teachers. The Rev. J. FRAZER (now Bishop of Manchester), in his report on the Common-school systems of the United States and Canada, presented some years ago to the Schools Inquiry Commission in England, quotes the following statement:

Mr. FRANKER adds that there is a strong preference in the United States for the employment of females as teachers "chiefly on the score of their superior cheapness, but also, in the estimation of many, on the ground of superior efficiency." The School Commissioner of Rhode Island is also mentioned.

stating that the female teachers are succeeding better as officers in that State than male teachers, "even in the management of turbulent boys." I

Ohio State Commissioner affirms, accordingly, to the same authority, that in the greater majority of the schools in that State women make better teachers than men. During 1872-3 of 308 licenses granted to teachers in New York, 52 were conferred on male and 256 on female teachers. Of the total number of teachers employed in the various schools 353

The Americans attach great importance to normal schools. The President of the Normal College of New York asserts that "wherever public schools are the most prosperous, normal schools are the most numerous," and he quotes General EATON as affirming that States that for a time suspended their normal schools have re-opened them, and that those having the largest number are disposed to increase them. Texas and Nevada, it appears are the only States in the Union that have no provided for normal instruction. Massachusetts, as might be supposed, "stands at the front rank," and, says the President, "provides a small army of teachers whose influence extends far beyond her own borders." It may be added that the whole number of normal institutions in the United States amounts to 114, with 445 teachers and 10,922 pupils. Mr. FRANKER represented the supply power of the normal schools of the United States as no longer very considerable.

proof of his statements. It would seem, however, from these figures that since the date of his report great advances must have been made in providing for a supply of trained teachers.

SUPREME COURT.—Master's Office, this day at 11 a.m.: M<sup>c</sup>Carthy v. Hartness and another, adjournment examination.

THE FIRST SLAUGHTER.—Those who look for the close of the Session will be gratified at learning that the "Slaughter of the Innocents" has commenced, M<sup>c</sup>Carthy v. Hartness and another, adjournment examination.

THE JUDGES AND RAILWAY TRAVELLING.—The following letter, which the Premier proposed to read in the Legislative Assembly last night, has been handed to us by Mr. G. C. Collyer, Secretary to the Hon. our dear Colonial Secretary.—I enclose an extract from the Sydney Morning Herald of this morning, purporting to be a report of a speech made last night by Mr. Cooper to the Assembly, which would seem by the words used to have been intended to refer to me. It is not for me to presume upon my part, I hope, to ask of you—at the head of the Government, in a matter reflecting on the character of one who has been so many years in the highest judicial position of the country, and who has been so long a member of the Government, it was intended to apply to me, is utterly without foundation. No such occurrence as that related, or any occurrence in the slightest degree resembling it, ever took place. I am not charging the cost of these railway fares to the Government, and I am not passing on their circuits, the Judges have for some years past received free passes for the Railway portion of the journey. But these passes franked, of course, the Judge only, and his family, and not some other person, as I have been charged under such an authority, had extended or attempted to extend it to members of his family or friends, is a charge which no gentleman would have made. I feel persuaded

I trust that the statement will furnish me with it. I am yours faithfully, ALFRED STEPHEN."

THE ASYLUM FOR INEBRIATES.—The executive committee met on Monday afternoon last—Mr. J. Paxton in the chair. The secretary reported that a circular had been sent to the magistrates, ministers, and medical men, asking them to nominate, if they saw fit, persons of the interests of the institution. Applications were received from persons who were prepared to accept the office of manager, and a selection was made. The appointment was referred until further information be obtained. It was resolved to send a copy of the circular to the editors of the newspaper and periodical Press throughout the colony.

for their various notices and kind advocacy of the claims of the institution. The committee met again on Friday night, and the house was engaged the manager, and it is hoped that in the course of a few weeks the institution will be open to receive inmates.

COMMITTAL FOR WEEKEND.—William Lawrence and Francis Lawrence, the two persons who so brutally assaulted their parents at Queanbeyan, were brought before the Bench of that town, on the 22nd instant, and, after evidence had been taken, were committed for trial to the next session of the district court. The defendants, in their own defence, stated that they were not guilty of the worship said it was not his wish to do any unnecessary remarks; he was sure the prisoners felt by any unnecessary remarks of his own; but he could not view their conduct in any other light than to make his cowardly, unmanly, and unchristianlike confession of his crime. However severe the bodily pain of the parents might have been from the blows inflicted on the mental sufferings occasioned by reflecting on the universal conduct of their grown-up sons—one of these sons, the youngest, was the first to confess his crime. "He said, 'I have seen you experienced the truth of the words,' 'Whosoever turn serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless child.' The serpent, as described by old Lavigne, was the worst, the most malicious of all reptiles. When Francis Lawton, flogged his father with a belated whip; his mother caught hold of the whip, but a draggled it through her hands and afterwards struck the old woman across the face, hands, and fingers with a stick, and afterwards several of which struck the latter and inflicted severe wounds on the lip and chest, and knocking out teeth. The defendant, William Lawless, stood by coolly watching the proceedings, and when his father was laid out, he merely said: "Don't hit me any more, but give it to him," and Frank Lawless then struck his father on the arm with a stone.

opinion that it was scarcely delicate first to profess honour and then to publish the refusal. Mr. Francis was not averse to the exercise of discretion of a colleague, and there is no longer any necessity for reticence. Some two years or more ago, in fact, before Mr. Francis became Chief Secretary, Lord Castletown, Mr. Parnell, and Mr. Russell, were in the habit of consulting him, and he would confer with some of the several prominent colonists, and asked him if a knightship would be acceptable to him. Fearing that the independence of his political action might be somewhat hampered if he were to accept of such an honour, he declined the offer. One, made just before Lord Castletown left the colony, was similar offer, either of knightship or the Order of St. George and St. Michael, has been made to the Chief Secretary.

WORDS O' CHERR.
 Le Galvin, Knox, and Luther cry,
 "I have the truth!"—"And I!"—"And I!"
 Fuir sinners! If ye gang a-gley,
 The de'il will hae ye;
 And then the Lord will stand abeigh,
 And will nae save ye.

The upright, honest-hearted man
 Who strives to do the best he can

Nor Hell's damnation;
For God will need no special plan

For his salvation.

The One who feels our deepest needs
Recks little how man counts his beads,
For righteousness is not in crowds
Nor solemn faces,
But rather lies in kindly deeds
And Christian graces.

Then never fear; we'll purpose loud
A heed to him; a heart to love
For him who saves and human weal,
No preaching! loon
Your sacred birthright of our steal
To heaven above.

Tak' tent o' truth, and heed this well,
The man who sins man's his own hell,
There's no worse do it than himself!
But God is strongest

He hauls out longest.

HAWTHORNE'S CASE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

R.—When I called public attention to Hawthorne's being

[illegible][illegible]

That sentence is itself a charming specimen of Colonial English, and has no time to forbear it. The sentence is an active verb, and the subject is the sentence in English except where the object is easily and readily supplied. "Work will resume." Will resume

"Candidates for the M.A. degree are required to state what subjects they wish to be examined." I pass by the error of the word "state," and the error of the word "be," and rely upon the English in which the University authorities publish their advertisements, and that the word "examine" is the word from the earliest times in the sense "choose and determine."

The principal will see parents relative to the admission of their children to the University. The word "relative" is much too common here. "Relative to" seems to be the alphabetic writers as if it were equivalent to "concerning," or "regarding," or "respecting," all of which have been in force from the earliest times in the sense "relate to" in their nature. "Relative to" has not quitted this force in English, and I venture to predict that it never will.

Your correspondent's letter is inelegant, ungrammatical, full of barbarisms, and I must say it, intensely colonial, both in style and composition. "Colonial English" abounds with errors of grammar and of usage, and is everywhere manifest as higher education becomes better appreciated:

nowhere let us have as little as possible of that unhappy of looking at the world as it is, and not as it should be, so to make for improvement, grammatically or otherwise, this highly favoured and cultivated "portion of her majesty's dominions." I have, &c.,

ABORIGINAL.

CAB FARES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

SIR,—It was generally supposed that the management of public conveyances would be improved after the Act for the improvement of the roads was passed. But it seems that at some time since, when they came in force, the applicants, the cabmen opposed the attempt successfully, the public grudging, and of ten wait in preference to riding in a cab because they know that they are not willing to pay whatever the cabman demands they must submit to abuse.
One really understood the present grievances. Even con sidering the fact that the greatest ignorance, and if that disputed are obliged to refer to the Omen to ascertain the proper rate. This glorious uncertainty is just what un dermines man like. A stranger arrives by steamer from the albourne; he takes a cab to the Royal Hotel. It is as exceptional case when he is not charged more than his fare, and it is no uncommon thing to be asked to pay men eighteen-pence, or one shilling, and the country gentlemen go into a cab at the Kriehstein, and when he offers the man his fare in George-street, the man says, "I have been robbed." He is not a thief, because he promised him three shillings, and then commences a dispute which is anything but seemly in a public place. He is a poor fellow, and he is not a thief because she will not pay double fare the cabman allows her into the shop, and tomes with such effect that he is obliged to leave her. He is a poor fellow, and he is anything to get rid of him. It is very true that there is a remedy for this by summoning the cabman to Court, and then the cabman will be obliged to pay him. But Sir Sydney streets for a week than face a Police Court, and the stranger by the steamer has possibly to leave the next day for the interior, or takes the first steamer to the coast, and then he is in a bad way. It is a hundred he can spare the time to prosecute, so that he is pretty well to pocket quietly the reward of his impudence. The no system of extortion? The complaints are universal, and no man has public spirit enough to ventilate the subject. They are not, however, to be taken as evidence of a general understanding what they are obliged to pay, and as a liberum veto the cabmen cannot object. It is impossible for anyone, particularly a stranger, to calculate the amount of the fare, and the driver of a Double Bay, it would be easy to ascertain how much the charge would be if the fare was by time.

To show the necessity of such regulations, one person directs that the fare in the city shall not by time, but in another part there is a provision that there shall be a mile for a shilling. Then again, you can drive to the city and back, and pay only a shilling, and then you can say, indeed you do not go any further; but if you are going to Oxford you must pay for that portion of the drive which is beyond the city, and the shilling is scarcely the least unreasonable. There is, of course, much to be said against the cabmen, and it is not necessary to assure they would be only too glad to have regulations which would give any consideration to the interests of the present system the whole body are blamed for the acts of a few. The new Transit Commissioners have, therefore, a very difficult and vexatious task to perform, and a very susceptible difficulty, and the experience of one gentleman, at any rate, should render the effort comparatively easy.
